Warpaint Stephanie A. Smith

A haunting tale of friendship and rivalry between three women artists, who've known each other for years, who must come to terms with imminent mortality and artistic frustration: Liz Moore, born poor in Minnesota, fought her way to New York in the 1920s, but isn't discovered until late in life; C.C. Davis, a well-to-do New Yorker is Moore's only student, and rival, who, just after WWII achieves some small success, but feels, as she faces cancer in 2002, a failure; and Quiola Kerr, part Ojibwe, once C.C.'s lover, who is caught in the middle, and who, as a painter in the 21st century, has the most doubts about art's value in an electronic world. In April 2002, all three meet a week before C.C.'s mastectomy at a MOMA retrospective for Liz Moore, but their reunion is tense. Still, they try to cope, until C.C. makes an unexpected and controversial choice, one which nearly breaks the bonds these three took so many decades to forge, and forces Quiola to try to confront Liz, who she believes deliberately sabotaged C.C.'s career.
