Li Sobindoy – Roma in Action focuses on the work of partnership of organizations from Germany, Turkey, Spain & the UK that sought to share and review their educational activities, principally working with and alongside Roma groups. The work suggests ways of responding to these socially and economically challenged groups, questioning existing non-Roma perceptions about Roma, while demonstrating that Roma can contribute to societies as a culturally rich and diverse population. The research shares practice aimed at building positive relations between Roma and majority populations, examining responses to the causes of Roma poverty and exclusion, partly the cause and effect of prejudice and discrimination towards these groups. Evaluation of approaches to other marginalized and disintegrated groups (migrants and refugees) is included. These responses, for example 'social compassion', can inform strategies working and collaborating with those pushed to the edge of consideration. The book is a valuable resource in terms of demonstrating how the exchange of methods, the sharing of information and successful approaches, can develop personal and group insight, and so enhance the provision of educational activities for and with Roma.
