This story was originally published in Day One, a weekly literary journal dedicated to short fiction and poetry from emerging writers.

Persnickety, old-fashioned farmer John Bailey is happiest when he's comparing the present to the past—and the present doesn't usually measure up. His neighbor, Cliff Masterson, prefers a newfangled way of doing things. So when Cliff advocates the razing of the town's piano factory to make way for a block of shiny modern condos, John and his wife, Marcy, step in to save the old building—a shared goal that happens to buoy their foundering marriage. But the couple is up against an adversary who plays by a different set of rules. And, when all is said and done, they're faced with thorny questions about the costs of both inertia and change, of knowing what to save and when to surrender.
