It is the custom of some persons to depreciate and even to ridicule genealogical inquiries and labors. The study of pedigree seems to them not only tedious, but profitless. They have no reverence or love for the past, and it is a matter of indifference who their ancestors were, or whether they ever had any. This is sometimes an eccentricity, sometimes a proud independence, which ignores ancestry in order to increase its own importance and show that its highest honors have not been attained through the wealth, patronage or name of progenitors. But a more fruitful cause of this low estimate has been the boasting and arrogance of some with reference to their distinguished ancestors. There is a false and a foolish pride of lineage which deserves censure and ridicule. It was such conceit that prompted a retort of Cicero, when a patrician said to him: You are a plebian. I am a plebian, replied the eloquent Roman orator, and the nobility of my family begins with me; but that of yours will end with you. The vain reliance upon remote and doubtful pedigree, and the arrogant assumption of place and honor by reason of distinguished descent is without correspondency; merit. The more one studies history, and races, and families, the more he must be convinced of the marked and permanent influences of blood, despite all the crossings by intermarriages. Every genealogist has marked and marveled at the continuance from generation to generation of some particular type of character that was visible in the earliest known ancestor. This fact has been strikingly illustrated in the two Thayer families and their descendants to this day; it is visible to any man of talent. To read aright the lesson of human history, to reach wise and safe generalizations, one must not forget the law of descent and force there is in blood or race. Tis poor, and not becoming perfect gentry, To build th
